Mobera Systems, an ISO 9001 certified company, is adopting world-class quality practices in order to improve internal processes for managing and delivering high quality software solutions and services to its growing base of international clients.

The company has engaged DQS India, the subsidiary of Germany's largest organisation for management system certification for the Maturity Level 3 SCAMPI Assessment on CMMI Model. With the world's best corporates like Siemens, Henkel, T-Systems, T-Mobile, IBM, and BASF as its clients, DQS is one of world's largest organization in the business of management system certification.

According to Anupama Arya, director of Mobera Systems, the company will be making significant investment in terms of cost, time and effort to achieve this milestone in becoming a world-class company. "Our target is to be CMMI-assessed by May 2007," she further said.

Mobera Systems, which recently acquired a US based software company, is focused on establishing world-class framework for improving organisational processes to develop and deliver high-performance and fully secured software products to its customers by incorporating SEI's CMMI standards, she said. This is for the first time that any IT company in the tricity has gone in for independent CMMI certification, said Anupama.
